The National Certificate for Personal Licence Holders (NCPLH)

Anyone authorising the sale of alcohol to the public must hold a personal licence to do so.

The NCPLH is the primary qualification sought by managers and their employees working in the licensed retail sector.

“there is only one thing worse than training someone and having them leave; that is not training someone and having them stay”

The NCPLH is a one day course and covers all the essential information required about the Licensing Act 2003. There is a short multiple-choice exam at the end of the day and those candidates passing the examination are awarded the certificate. This certificate is accepted as a relevant licensing qualification in England and Wales when applying for a personal licence.
